Not illustrated. 1854 Excerpt: .view of humanity to be the true one, --could advocate a doctrine which reduces everything to locomotion; which makes Appetite the great primum mobile, and supposes men to be a set of steam-engines, running against each other with a mutual implacable hatred, and only restrained by the intervention of a set of provisional tram-roads, formed so as to allow to each the greatest possible latitude, and the creation of a despotic Leviathan, or engineer, with an unlimited irresponsible power over all, to see that each keeps to his own line. And now that we have briefly analysed the moral and political philosophy of Hobbes, and shown but little charity to his principles, let us manifest some for the man. There is, as I have shown, much to admire in his character; and there is also much to account for his adoption of those pernicious principles which he so ably promulgated, and was the first to bring into fashion. It has been said, with a certain degree of truth, that all men are born Aristotelians or Platonists, Nominalists or Realists; and Hobbes was by nature a Nominalist.f Thus the very constitution of his mind, and his natural tone of thought, would of themselves incline to the sensualistic school of philosophers. Moreover, Hobbes lived and wrote in times of civil war, when the bad passions, to which he attributes so much, are most prominently and distinctly brought forward. That Hobbes had meditated much and deeply upon the nature...
