Good reading-books will supply the necessary materials for lessons on all these subjects. But each teacher would do well to draw up some graduated scheme of instruction, so as to secure the utmost possible advantages to all his scholars, and to induce parents to prolong their children's stay at school, in the assurance that the time there spent will have been time well spent, even for the mere purpose of money-earning in after life. CHAPTER VI. NEEDLEWORK. Needlework should occupy the first hour of afternoon school. Out of five hours one should be devoted to knitting. Special pains should be taken to see that every girl has clean hands, and that no time be wasted either in setting to work or afterwards. The...
